Elective the Program

Traditionally both Marketing and HR have been looked upon as separate entities with the former focused on external environment and the latter in an internal setting. In today's digital world, it's the union of Marketing and HR that is fueling a company's growth.

Both Marketing and HR represent a vital component to businesses everywhere. The common element in HR and Marketing streams is people. For any industry, the Marketing and HR streams work in sync and share few common objectives that are targeted toward different audiences. Marketing is responsible for the branding of the company, discovering a company's message and communicating the same to its consumers. On the other hand, HR is accountable for employment branding; ensuring the organization is perceived properly by internal employees and external candidates. Working together, HR finds the best people to promote and build the brand, while marketing creates and delivers the brand message to employees. At the end, HR and marketing must work cohesively and use empathy to truly connect with and understand employees. This duo combination is the heart to run any organization and it seems promising for the prospective employers and job seeking graduates. This elective will help you develop the skills for a variety of Marketing and HR careers
